Charlotte High School Forms New Interact Club

Charlotte High School has had a banner year.

Students of CHS continue to excel in the classroom and athletics, and the addition of new clubs has allowed students to get involved in several new ways. One such new club is the Interact Club.

Interact, in partnership with Rotary International, is a teen service organization that serves one local and one global project per year. This year, Interact's local project is a community outreach effort in which Interact members will spend time playing with and getting to know children from Charlotte Elementary Schools. Its global project is creating gift and entertainment bags for patients at a children's hospital.

Interact was founded by seniors Andrew Lula and Kirstin Anderson, who first heard of the opportunity at Rotary's RYLA Summer Camp. The club was generously funded by Charlotte Rotary, a pillar of community service in Charlotte, and receives considerable help and guidance from the local Rotary and its members, including the late Bob Fulton, whose estate has given $2,000 toward efforts of Interact.

CHS Interact Club would like to thank both Charlotte Rotary and the entire community of Charlotte for its continued support as its members strive toward their goal of changing the world in a positive and meaningful way a little more every day.
